Document ID:976107798

Memorandum: Completely harmless

Classification ☐ Omega ☐ Daemon ☐ Stuia ☒ Safe ☐ Recondite ☐ Beneficial

1 Specification

A small silver vault with a rusted spinning wheel used to open it. It is about  $30cm \times 30cm \times 30cm$  and is heavily worn, with scratches catching the light at all angles. There appears to be a manufacture logo on the top side, but it is significantly worn out, and thus cannot be recognised. When shut, 3 large bolts move across to lock the door in a smooth fashion.

2 Containment Procedures

Should be kept away from public view due to its potential memetic hazard properties.

3 Behaviour

S-0132 can reportedly bend space time to fit different volumes within itself, we are testing to verify this claim.

Behavioural Assessment 1 S-0132 was not found to have any unique abilities. Our first test showed that S-0132 could fit the expected amount of fluid for its volume. Though the vault was  $30cm \times 30cm \times 30cm$ , cultists [See addendum 2] were saying that the vault couldn't actually store a liquid of  $27000cm^3$ , but instead only  $19683cm^3$ . This claim was verified as true, and led to the name "SOTI"- Smaller On The Inside. However, the point that the cultists failed to realise was that the dimensions for the vault are measured from the outside. This means they forgot to take into consideration the width of vaults sides, which were approximately  $1.5\text{cm}$  thick on sides, leaving a  $27\text{cm} \times 27\text{cm} \times 27\text{cm}$  space inside the vault. The reason the anomaly report for this is still kept in archive is to comically show the effects that a poor education system can lead to, that can end up costing more in resources to fix. Though there is the possibility that S-0132 has mild memetic effects. [TESTING CONCLUDED]

4 Origination

This vault gathered a cult following in the Middle East, in the country of [REDACTED] where it was discovered. Locals said that it broke the laws of physics and were spreading inaccurate truths - that the countries government were keeping groundbreaking technologies from the general public. This was one of their forms of propaganda that lead to the so called "Right to Information Protests" that was swiftly dealt with by [REDACTED]'s prime minister at the time by [REDACTED] which cost millions to cover up. Rather than just disposing of the vault, it was given to the corporation to try and explain how something as simple as a vault could convince people to act so irrationally.

It eventually came to be that the whole issue was because of poor mathematics practices in the countries education system rather than any supposed unusual behaviour (further investigation into memetic properties needed).

5 Postscript

5.1 Addendum 1

What follows is the debrief given by lead researcher [REDACTED] to Head of Research Dr. Rex in 2012.

[START OF TRANSCRIPT]

[03/12, 12:03] Dr. Rex: Hello, thanks for giving time in your day to speak to me.

[03/12, 12:03] [REDACTED]: No worries.

[03/12, 12:03] Dr. Rex: Can you give a brief description on Subject - 0132?

[03/12, 12:03] [REDACTED]: In as simple a sentence as possible... a waste of time!

[03/12, 12:03] Dr. Rex: Are you saying there's nothing to report?

[03/12, 12:04] [REDACTED]: We have just been testing a regular vault for the last 2 weeks, there appears to be nothing anomalous about this vault at all. I am beyond speechless how this is a problem to do with us at all!

[03/12, 12:04] Dr. Rex: Right... Well were there any lessons to be learnt from this?

[03/12, 12:04] [REDACTED]: The one and only thing is this is an eye opener to remember to never underestimate the stupidity or gullibility of humanity, and how easy it is to sway public opinion.

[END OF TRANSCRIPT]

5.2 Addendum 2

"Cultist" is used here as a generic term to describe all the various groups that followed and worshipped S-0132. Nature of the activities performed by the cult give no immediate allusions to anomalous memetic properties, though the research team believe there may be mild memetic influences which arise from long and repeated exposure to S-0132.
