1 Specification

S-0058 appears as a humanoid figure 2.1 metres tall wearing a space suit that isn't affiliated with any known space agencies. The suit itself has no distinguishing markings and is instead covered in commonly occurring seaweed. Despite this, the suit is in very good condition, showing very few signs of physical damage. The visor of the suit has a dark purple tint and behind it a human skull is present. The skull is cleansed of all tissue except bone and is largely covered with dirt and blemishes. Researchers have been unable to breach the suit and so the contents, other than what can be seen through the visor, are largely down to speculation.

2 Containment Procedures

S-0058 needs to be kept in a specialised holding cell at all times. The cell must suspend a sphere of liquid (usually water) in the air so that it isn't in contact with any other solid surface using gravity manipulation. Within this floating ball of water is the only secure area S-0058 can be contained. It is paramount that this sphere never stops being suspended - in the event of a malfunction of the artificial gravity machine, or in any other case where the sphere comes into contact with a solid, S-0058 can easily breach containment. For this reason, S-0058 is located within Facility 59, completely submerged deep within the ocean.

3 Recontainment Procedures

S-0058 cannot pass through matter that exists as liquids. Instead, S-0058 becomes trapped inside, unable to move and escape, so long as it remains within the liquid. To recontain S-0058, the facility in which it is being held must be fitted with specialised recontainment infrastructure, this includes floodable corridors and rooms, with bulkheads to separate them. If S-0058 has breached containment, recontainment personnel must wait until S-0058 is within a floodable room, and then inundate the room with a liquid. This incapacitates S-0058 and allows it to be safely transferred back into containment so long as it remains within a liquid.

4 Behaviour

S-0058 is capable of shifting through any solid matter. When S-0058 comes into contact with a solid surface it begins to change it into a soft, malleable, fluid-like surface. Despite reaching a state of fluidity the matter still maintains the structural integrity of its solid state. Once fluidity has been achieved, S-0085 can shift through it and enter the solid. In this state, S-0058 can translate very quickly within the solid allowing it to emerge from any other exposed surface, where it will also change the state of the solid to fluid in order to exit. Evidence of S-0058 movement in and out of solids can be observed in a residual warping of the surface it interacted with - looking similar to if the solid had been melted and frozen again.

This subject is also hostile towards humans. It exhibits this hostility by relentlessly pursuing anyone it can see and then dragging its victims into an extra-planar dimension. S-0058 will grapple its victim before forcing the victim to see how they will die in the future [See addendum 1]. This suggests that entering S-0058's pocket dimension doesn't kill the victim. Instead, the victim will die at some point later in the future, either within the pocket dimension, or outside if they somehow managed to escape. As far as we are aware no one has escaped S-0058's pocket dimension and so we have no information regarding the properties of it.

Attempts to communicate with S-0058 have had varying results. While contained researchers have attempted multiple methods of communication and the most successful thus far has been using projected nano-particle collection. It was discovered that S-0058 emits benign nanoparticles. Using devices that can absorb and collect these, S-0058 has been able to emit patterns of nanoparticles that researchers have been able to decipher into comprehensible communication. S-0058 seems to understand when we communicate with it using standard oral communication. What follows is a brief interaction with S-0058 by Dr. Grin.

[START OF TRANSCRIPT]

[18/03, 19:13] Dr. Grin: Why are you covered in seaweed if water stops you from being able to move?

[18/03, 19:15] S-0058: I am the beginning, the face of doubt and disbelief. I am the envoy of finality, of Terminus.

5 Origination

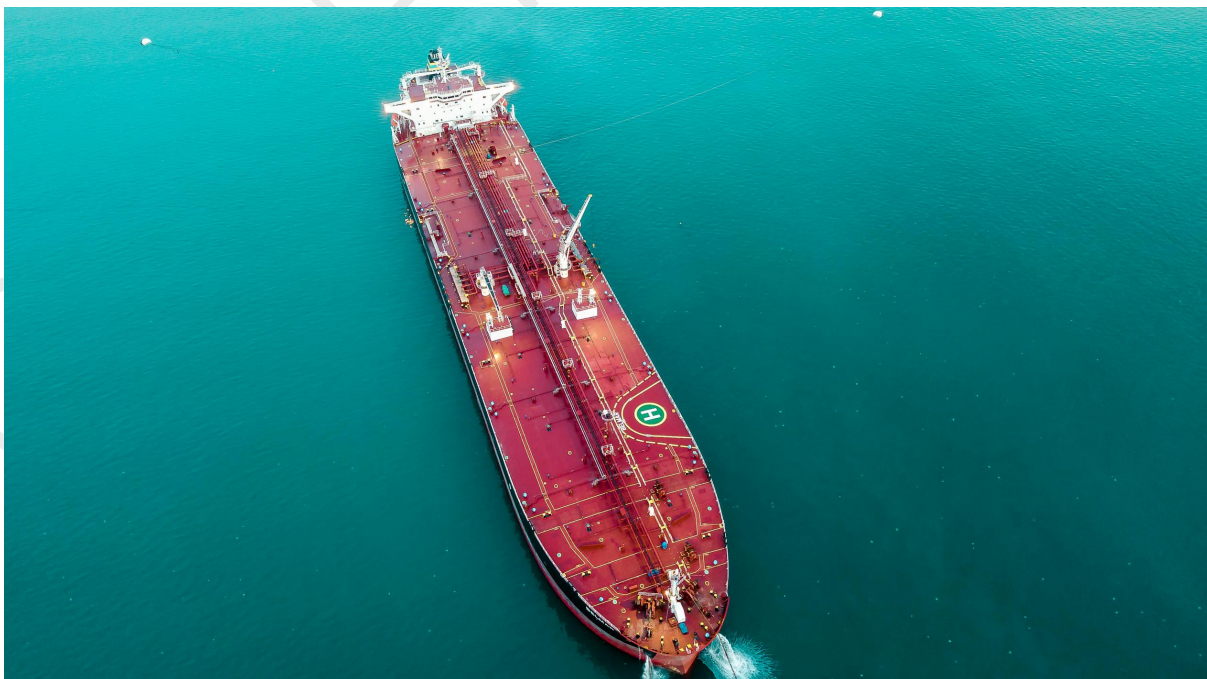

Fig. 2. Cargo ship where S-0058 was first found.

S-0058 was found on board an abandoned cargo vessel whose route took it through the Bermuda Triangle. The ship was supposed to be delivering goods to a port in Florida except, when it arrived, dock workers reported it completely abandoned without any bodies. When workers boarded the ship to investigate, they noted that many of the metal surfaces had been warped. After several minutes of investigation, the workers were attacked by S-0058 who ambushed them. The boat was then put on lockdown, which inadvertently stopped S-0058 from reaching dry land. From here the Corporation took control of the situation, where the boat remained on lockdown for several days before containment personnel understood the nature of S-0058. After observing S-0058's behaviour and discovering it was averse to water, they turned the boat into a temporary containment facility before S-0058 could be safely transferred to an underwater containment cell.

6 Postscript

6.1 Addendum 1

The last words of a distressed victim in the process of being taken by S-0058.

"What, n- no, what is this? The shadows, I'm still young, my family will see this. I can't die then, what's happening? This... won't happen, I'm still alive, aren't I? I don't believe it; I can't believe it. The shadows."
