1 Specification

S-0123 first appeared as a giant hole in the ground around two metres wide and of an unknown depth. The hole appears to exhibit signs of natural formation - although, despite being naturally occurring, the physical features of the hole do not match where it is located. The hole is located in the Australian Outback and yet has smoothed walls as if weathered by consistent rainfall, even though there is very little rainfall in the Outback.

Fig. 1. Surrounding area of where S-0123 was first discovered.

When descending into the hole people will begin to notice a miasma that progressively gets thicker the deeper you go, until eventually your vision is completely obscured. The miasma can first be noticed at around five metres deep. Chemical analysis of the miasma has yielded unremarkable results, with the true makeup of this miasma remaining a mystery.

Since the discovery of the original hole in Australia other holes of similar properties have been discovered across the world. Whether or not they are linked is still uncertain. One such hole S-0123-1 was located in the garden of a family home which was discovered when a child dug it up. This hole and the nearby house showed an anomalous spike event, even though the ambient anomalous activity of the area was within a safe threshold. The spike in activity coincided with strange reports within the house [See addendum 1].

2 Containment Procedures

Since S-0123 is a hole in the ground it cannot be moved by any means, this has meant that a small containment outpost needed to be constructed around it. The area around S-0123 in a five-mile radius has been walled off and several watch towers have been constructed within that zone. At least two guards must man these watch towers at all times, a small command post has also been constructed to oversee containment operations.

The guards of this area need to be equipped with a versatile range of state-of-the-art weaponry and containment tools due to the unknown behaviour of entities that might emerge from S-0123.

3 Recontainment Procedures

S-0123 itself does not need to ever be recontained, however, entities that emerge from it do. The entities that have emerged from S-0123 have been diverse and have each exhibited differing and unique properties and behaviours. Since it has been impossible to determine what might emerge, it is paramount that guards in the area respond appropriately using their own intuition and ingenuity to quell any threats.

There have been cases where entities emerge that have emerged previously. In this case, guards need to promptly refer to the correct recontainment procedures that would be recorded in the respective entities database file.

4 Behaviour

S-0123 displays no independent observable behaviours. What can be observed is how humans and other objects behave when they descend and ascend within S-0123. R-123 have been in charge of tests regarding the climbing of S-0123 and have therefore devised specialised climbing gear. The gear includes a specialised mask and hermetically sealed suit designed to also protect the wearer from gravity fluctuations which have been recorded at certain depths. The climbing gear also utilises Corporate patented climbing claws and boots in order to maintain enough grip on the smooth walls.

Effects on human physiology only occur after ascending from the depths, the descent itself does not appear to share this effect. The following are recorded effects after ascending from the given depth.

Depth Assessment

5m: No recorded effects.

10m: Minor joint and muscle aches.

20m: Nausea, irritability, and minor aches across the body.

50m: Acute joint and muscle pain described as 'unbearable'.

100m: Intense pain spanning the entire body, blurred vision, and vomiting.

200m: Large-scale bruising spanning the entire body, ruptured blood vessels, delirium, and temporary blindness.

500m: Severe skin lesions and bleeding.

1000m: Skin becomes paper-like and begins falling off causing extreme pain and bleeding and, in some cases, death.

2000m: Total breakdown of tissue within the body causing death instantly.

No human has been able to survive going deeper and often their body is completely gone and broken down to nothing before reaching the surface. Robotic recording mechanisms have been used to explore further, as S-0123 has little effect on non-organic entities.

10000m: Gravity fluctuations, robots recorded being pushed and pulled in multiple directions, this proceeded to become more extreme the deeper the robots went.

20000m: Disappearance of the robots – no known explanation, nothing has exceeded this depth.

Robots that have descended past 10000m and have returned to the surface with 'extra-planar' material residue on them as described by R-123. This material is not recorded to exist on this plane of existence and disappears quickly upon reaching the surface. The properties of this material remain a mystery as it ceases to exist before R-123 has an opportunity to analyse it. On the surface S-0123 releases entities at what appears to be regular intervals which gives guards time to prepare for recontainment. The intervals appear to be linked to the astral alignment of the planets in our solar system. The emergence of an entity is also preceded by a deep, low-pitched resonance originating from an unknown depth within S-0123.

5 Origination

S-0123 was first discovered at an undisclosed location within the Australian Outback by GOSA-AI See [GOSI-AI], where they were using S-0123 to allow new subjects to freely enter this world. After reports of subjects originating from this area, a small and elite Corporate taskforce attempted to stop GOSA-AI operations and take control of the situation.

The Corporate task force was defeated decisively by a greatly numerically superior GOSA-AI militant group of around 10,000 armed personnel. In response, a Corporate Grey Division was dispatched sporting 50,000 professional soldiers. By the time the Grey Division arrived, GOSA-AI had reinforced their warband to have over 100,000 fighting men. Despite the uneven odds, the Greys won a pyrrhic victory with both sides suffering major casualties. The entire GOSA-AI warband was destroyed and scattered and the Greys sustained █████ casualties, this would come to be known as The Battle of the Outback.

After the battle was finished The Corporation seized control of S-0123 and the surrounding area and established the containment outpost.

6 Postscript

6.1 Addendum 1

S-0123-1 was reported to have been correlated with some strange activity occurring within the house of the garden that S-0123-1 is in. Within the house 'paranormal' activity was described to be occurring by the occupants similar to what you would hear described within a fictional ghost story, such as: doors slamming by themselves, strange noises and temperature fluctuations.

One such report indicated that children's toys appeared to become alive, move and talk as if they were sentient beings. The parents reported that their child established a relationship with one of these toys which appeared to be linked to an increase in violent and psychopathic behaviours displayed by the child.

The house and the child were seized by the Corporation and are now under constant observation with the codes S-0064, and S-0064-1 respectively.

6.2 Addendum 2

Extract from a medical report of a member of R-123 who ascended from 2456m and died promptly upon reaching the surface:

His bodily tissue is like wet paper, it disintegrates to the touch. His blood has become a dry powder and what's most strange is that when we try to interact with his bodily tissues in any way they don't simply break down, they seem to break down exponentially into smaller and smaller pieces until they cease to exist.

After attempting to analyse the deceased for several hours, the state and quality of his body deteriorated so much that eventually no trace of was left at all.
